THE COWARD.—A NOVEL OF SOCIETY AND THE FIELD IN IRELAND.

BY HENRY MORFORDE, author of "Shoulder Straps," "The Days of Shirley," &c., and in uniform style with them. With this taking and unequivocal threatening title, Messrs. T. B. Peterson & Sons, Philadelphia, have now in press the third of Mr. Henry Morford's series of war novels, and will publish it in a few days. From the popular success of the first two—"Shoulder Straps," and the still broader field now enunciated, we predict a succession on its publication, more assured than that made by either of the others. "The Coward," does not mean the war alone, but it means all the specie of society that can put a story of grand interest, and the incidents of which range between the saloon and the battle-field, has some of its leading events located under the ungenial scenery of the White Mountains, with situation descriptions inverted, making it the most interesting and instructive book on the market for the "book" for tourists and wintering-place habitants. It comes to good time for both purposes, and will no doubt be popular alike in the tents of the Union Army and the hotel parlors of the White Mountain, Niagara, and Catskill.

It is a well-made, full-length volume, bound in cloth, for $1 25.
